Professional Experience

Vocational Evaluator
Stevenson and Bruns
2001 — Present

Marlis evaluates individuals for the purpose of assessing future employability and wage earning capacity in conformity with California Family Code, Section 4320. She has qualified and testified as a court expert in Contra Costa, Alameda, San Mateo, San Francisco, Santa Clara, Solano and Sacramento Counties as well as out-of-state jurisdictions. She is qualified to administer and interpret vocational test instruments and has performed in-depth research and statistical analysis for re-entry and professional workers in numerous industries, including information technology, education, social services, architecture/ engineering, graphic and fine arts, medical sciences, and professional services. She is knowledgeable about availability, duration and costs associated with the training and rehabilitation programs in the Bay Area.

Marlis conducts diagnostic interviews to understand an individual's background, education and work experience. She interprets vocational test results to identify transferable work skills, aptitudes, values and interests and has experience reporting conclusions supported by documented data, primary and secondary research, including minimum qualifications, earnings averages, and, when applicable, timeframe estimates to reach stated objectives.

Corporate and Non-Profit Experience

Marlis has nine years of experience in management and staff positions in the corporate and non-profit sectors. Her job functions included recruitment, fundraising, marketing, training, business development and control of annual budgets exceeding 1.2 million. Marlis applies her knowledge of work culture, hiring practices, and interviewing strategies to help individuals identify a broad selection of career options and make realistic career choices.
